law Judge's (ALJ's) residual functional capacity determination was not supported by substantial evidence and failed to account adequately for his mental impairments; (2) the ALJ erroneously failed to find that his bipolar disorder and personality disorder were severe impairments; and (3) the ALJ erroneously failed to find that his affective disorder met or medically equaled Listing 12.04. Following careful review of the parties' submissions and the record before us, we conclude that each of Bryan's arguments lacks merit.
